“What do biofilms have to do with chronic disease, persistent wounds and recurrent infections?”

Biofilms are complex polymicrobial communities that contribute to many chronic diseases, including periodontal disease and caries. Biofilms play a significant role in the development of chronic wounds, delayed wound healing and persistent re-infections and resist traditional antibiotic therapy. New combination therapies are emerging that treat Mother Nature’s most unique microbial challenges.

“Melting Tooth Syndrome—unraveling the mysteries of preventing and treating dentinal hypersensitivity and erosive disease”

Patients often suffer needlessly from erosion and hypersensitivity, problems that profoundly affect quality of life and create enormous clinical challenges. Exposed dentin, dry mouth syndrome and acidic diets contribute directly to the rising incidence of melting tooth syndrome. Discover new, novel diagnostic and treatment protocols that address these perplexing problems.
