

Week 3 Idaho Legislative Update for January 24 – 28, 2022

The third week of the Sixty-Sixth Idaho Legislature's Second Regular Session brought with it a mickle of new legislation and rule change proposals from committees – a change from the last two weeks. Legislators heard presentations from the Judiciary this week on the House and Senate floors. Agencies continue to present requests to JFAC for modifications, increases, and adjustments to their budgets. There are some consistent absences that have been observed amongst the legislature and staff that could be attributed to COVID, but the work continues, and receptions have gained attendance as Session continues. One thing is for sure: Session is in full swing. Everyone in the Capitol is caught up in a flurry of bills as committees work on their lists of priorities before their fast-approaching deadlines.

With a record surplus, and billions in federal funds flowing to the state, the Idaho Legislature is navigating through the difficult task of balancing fiscal responsibility, while strategically funding one-time and long-term priorities, and providing tax relief for Idahoans. Much of the work done so far focuses on appropriations and administrative changes pertaining to red tap reduction and zero-based regulation. While each session is both a budget and policy year in Idaho, budgets have been prioritized and policy changes that ease regulatory burdens are the ones advancing. While the Legislature has fought the Governor on nearly everything the past few sessions, they seem to have shared objectives this year they are working towards.

The largest tax cut bill in Idaho history continues on the fast track, having cleared the Senate Local Government & Taxation Committee on Thursday afternoon – the Senate is expected to vote on this bill early next week. It is expected to pass, and the Governor has indicated he will sign it. If it passes the Senate, this tax cut proposal would be the first bill of the session to make it to the Governor's Desk and would set the tone for much of the other work to come this Session. What is unique about these circumstances is that tax cut bills typically come at or near the end of session once budgets are set and other commitments are funded. While this bill's passage did not come under normal circumstances, commitments from House and Senate Leadership to transportation, education, and even working on other tax policies and cuts remain the hot topics in the Capitol.

With the tax cut bill well on its way, leadership has turned their attention to other priorities as they seek a short session with large wins heading into a contentious election cycle. Tweaks to last year's House Bill 389 relating to property taxes are being introduced to try to mitigate some of the consequence of a hastily passed bill that failed to alleviate the property tax burden many Idahoans feel. Transportation funding, workforce housing, broadband, education, teacher funding, wildfire mitigation costs, and many other polices are now working their way through the process. House and Senate Committee Chairmen seem to be working well together. The legislative rules review and approval process is nearly done. These trends are additional indicators that the traditional, short session has returned.

The Idaho Supreme Court issued its decision on reapportionment (redistricting of legislative districts) on Thursday afternoon in a 5-0 vote and with over twenty pages of justification. Several legislators have grown concerned about the state of their districts and what these changes mean for their political futures. Some have chosen to retire and want to get a few things done before they go, others are scrambling to show progress on issues and funding for their new districts. This has added a unique tone to an otherwise seemingly normal session.

As we enter the next phase of session, we will be watching closely and working hard to ensure your interests are protected and your policy needs are met. On occasion, we may look to you for quick responses on policies as they are being introduced or taken under consideration as the House and Senate floor sessions will continue to get longer, and committees will become increasingly more active.
